As time changes, the measurement of success in life also changes. For example, wealth as the first thing that many people use to judge success in one's life is changing when the time has passed. Thousands of years ago when humans were still cavemen, it might have been how big your cave was. Hundreds of years ago it might have been how big your land was.

Today it is how much money is in your bank account, so maybe in the future, it might be something else.

For me, to measure success is how happy and peaceful a person is. Being the richest man in the world does not mean you are the happiest man, although money can buy you happiness sometimes; but not always.

In conclusion, the measurement of success in your life can be many things. It just depends on time, what goals you have and who is the one doing the judging.
