Parents are in most cases our first teachers and friends. Based on my experience, I have to agree with the statement that important decisions should be made by our parents or adult relatives.

We all know that teenagers are basically inexperienced. They have the tendency to live in their own fantasies and they don't clearly understand the rules of real life. Thus, parents should intervene with their children's lives to help them make the right choices and avoid a lot of mistakes.

On the other hand, parents should also listen to their children's point of views. In that way, children will think that their opinions matter to their parents.

To sum up, I believe that teenage children should trust their parents because they only wish the best for them.
