What does "pollo" mean?

Nobuo takes Hiro to a Mexican restaurant nearby. They are looking at the menu.

Hiro :What does "pollo" mean?

Nobuo:That`s !poh-yoh!. It means "chicken"

Hiro :Ahh, like "tori" in Japan. Then, what`s this "mole pollo"?"

Nobuo:It`s chicken in a chocolate sauce.

Hiro :Chocolate sauce? No thanks.

Practical tips on how to conduct yourself during and executive business luncheon, so as to ensure a good impression.

CHOOSE THE RESTAURANT WISELY

It is always advisable to take your guest to a restaurant you have personal knowledge of, preferably close to work. This guarantees good service and regular patrons are accorded the best tables. Familiarity with the maitre'd and staff will surely impress.

MAKE RESERVATIONS

Inform the maitre'd of the business luncheon ahead of time. State preferences - a table with a view, a nice quiet corner. Beats battling harried waiters by the kitchen area.

NAPKIN NO-NO'S

Place the napkin on your lap once seated. If you need to get up, leave the napkin on

Pasta, soup and unshelled seafood tastes great but not at a business meal. Having bits of sauce decorating your tie does not project professionalism. Alcohol consumption should be kept to a minimum as your potential client does not want to enter into business with one slurring or passing out during lunch.

KEEP THE PROPS MINIMAL

The table should be clutter free. Restaurant tables are small to begin with. Only basic materials for the business pitch are necessary. Turn the cell phone off - contrary to popular belief you can survive an hour without it.

END THE MEAL

Once you have had desert and coffee, end the meeting. Do not browbeat your guest into making immediate decisions. Make it seem like you have another pressing engagement. Looking busy always helps. Shake hands and take your leave.
