officials were waiting to greet him. They promptly took him to North Korea's capital, Pyongyang, by car.

The reception in Pyongyang was lavish and in true North Korean style, expertly orchestrated. Citizens enthusiastically waved plastic flowers as they cheered the meeting of the two national leaders. Kim Jong-Il seemed reserved and unemotional throughout the proceedings, while South Korea's leader appeared to enjoy every moment as he waved and smiled at onlookers. A government official said: "The greeting may seem to be less emotional and enthusiastic because it was the second of its kind...However, the North showed its best sincerity." Another spokesperson told reporters that such a welcome, with an open motorcade, is very rare and an honor only for high-level dignitaries. People on both sides of the border now hope their leaders can make further steps towards peace.
