Lesson 11

LOCALLY PRODUCED FOOD

These days, most of the food that people buy is produced far from where they live. Some experts say that this lead to environmental problems. For example, a lot of fuel is used to carry farm products over long distances. Eating locally produced food helps reduce the amount of fuel necessary for transporting these products, so it is good for the environment.

Your story should begin with this sentence: One day, Mr. and Mrs. Takahashi were talking about what to have for dinner.
