SAMPLE ANSWERS

One day, a man was talking to the owner of the store next to his. They were looking down the street, where only a few people were shopping. The man said something needed to be done to attract more customers. At a store owner's meeting, the man presented an idea to the other store owners. He suggested they try to make the street more attractive by planting trees and flowers, and by providing benches for people to sit down and relax on. The other store owners agreed with his idea. A year later, the street was full of people enjoying the trees and flowers, and the man looked pleased as he served customers at his store. That fall, however, the man was sweeping up fallen leaves. The owner of the bookstore was taking care of the plants and complaining that it was a lot of work.
