SAMPLE ANSWERS

One day, a man was at home with his family. His two sons were playing together with a train set in the living room. The man's wife was trying to vacuum and said to her husband that she wished their sons had more space to play. That night, the man and his wife were discussing what they could do about the situation. The man suggested they move to a bigger house, and his wife agreed. Six months later, the man and his family were outside their new house. Some men from the moving company were unloading the family's furniture. The man told his sons they would each have their own room, and they were excited to hear this. A month later, the man's sons were in their own rooms doing different things. The man looked concerned and said to his wife that their sons never played together anymore.
