- No. 2 What do you think that some people these days choose to eat out rather than make meals at home?
- No. 3 Should a system giving tips for good service be introduced in restaurants in Japan?
- No. 4 Do you think that people today are too concerned with protecting their personal information?

One evening, a restaurant owner was working at his restaurant. Suddenly, one of his customers called him over. The man complained that the people at the next table were taking photos and disturbing him and his wife while they were having dinner. Later that night, after the owner had returned home, he read a newspaper article that said people's public manners were getting worse. It reminded him of what had happened earlier that evening. The next week, the owner put up a sign that said no photos would be allowed to be taken in his restaurant. That way, he hoped that his customers would be able to enjoy their dinner in a nice, relaxed atmosphere. A few days later, however, the owner faced an unexpected problem at his restaurant. An elderly couple asked him to take a picture of them as it was their 40th wedding anniversary. The owner was not sure

- No. 3 Yes. Giving tips is a good way to reward service that deserves recognition. It encourages people working in restaurants to work harder and look after their customers more.
- No. 4 No. I've heard that some banks recently lost their customer's personal information. Such information could be used by criminals, so people are right to be concerned.
