One summer's day, a young man was talking with a female co-worker in the office. On the wall was a sign telling staff to keep the air conditioners set at 28 degrees. The woman told the man it was too hot to concentrate. The young man had an idea. At a meeting later that day, the man suggested they stop wearing jackets and ties. The boss and the other people listened attentively most of the staff thought it was a good idea. A few days later, the staff were working without jackets and ties, and they seemed happy with the new dress code. Just then, the young man's boss reminded him about the clients coming the next day. The young man said he would be ready. The next day, the young man went into the meeting room and saw that everyone else was wearing a suit. He was embarrassed that he was dressed so casually. and his boss looked angry.
