GP1 08-3

Dear Mika,

How are things? I read an article about raising children yesterday, and I'm interested in your opinions.

In the U.S., some children get a weekly allowance from their parents, and they can spend the money however they want. What do you think about giving children an allowance?

Actually, I don't get an allowance, and my parents say I'm too young to get a part-time job. At what age do you think it's OK for children to have part-time jobs?

The article also said that children should help their parents with housework. Do

I'm doing well. I wrote my opinions about your questions below.

I think giving children a weekly allowance can help them learn how to manage their money. However, parents should be careful not to give their children too much as it may spoil them.

Children shouldn't be allowed to work part time until they turn 18. Instead, they should focus on doing well in school, which is more important.

As for children doing housework, I definitely think they should. If children learn how to do such chores, it will benefit them when they move away from home.

I hope this helps.

Mika
