8 Multinational corporations have the potential to play a positive role in society, but in my 9 opinion, the majority of them are failing to do so.

10 First of all, multinationals should be bringing great benefit to consumers. They could 11 potentially help economies by providing people with reasonably priced, high-quality goods by 12 means of economies of scale and adherence to international quality standards. Instead, 13 however, multinationals often create monopolies and drive smaller local competitors out of 14 business. This hurts consumers by keeping prices high and limiting the selections of available 15 products.

16 Another failure is in the area of human rights. Multinationals could be promoting human 17 rights by ensuring that their suppliers and business partners treat their workers properly.
18 Instead, however, multinationals are often accused of failing to pay living wages and condoning 19 child labor.

20 Most multinationals are also failing society in terms of the environment. Instead of using
