Sample answer 答えを作るときに参考にして下さい。 : There is no doubt that the internet has modernized communication and information-sharing in the same way that the telegraph and the television did before it. However, societies have had to cope with unanticipated new problems, including crimes which traditional laws are powerless to prevent. To begin with, the universal rule of the Internet means that national laws are no longer sufficient to control what happens online. Take restrictions on legal reporting, for example. In some countries, the media is prohibited from revealing details of a defendant's past in case this prejudices a fair trial. However, such restrictions are no longer enforceable now that information may be freely published in other
